Training Course Overview

Managing global teams, with members working in different time zones or coming from different cultures, is not easy. As leaders we need to understand how culture impacts our staff, customer expectations and longevity of our organisation. Then we can respond appropriately.

This Anderson training course provides delegates with skills to navigate the cultural differences and invisible boundaries that divide people globally. We share practical tools and techniques for diagnosing culture, identifying appropriate ways of leading virtual teams, and managing differences to create cohesive teams that add value to the business. We also delve into how to meet customer expectations in different countries and develop a global marketing plan that is practical and implementable.

Training Course Objectives

By attending this Anderson training course, delegates will be able to:

- Recognise and respond to the global challenge facing their organisation
- Develop a corporate culture that supports high performance, loyalty and motivation
